Chancellor Adenauer, Mr. Vice-President, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Joint Session, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, it is a pleasure to me to present to you the Honorable Price Daniel, Governor of the State of Texas.

Governor Daniel addressed the Joint Session as follows:

Your excellencies, distinguished guests, members of the Legislature, ladies and gentlemen. As Governor, I have welcomed the Chancellor and his distinguished party and now it is my privilege as Governor of this State to officially welcome the Chancellor and his party and to say how much we have enjoyed having him with us. We are especially honored that he is here today to accept and to speak on invitation of the Legislature at this joint session. At this time, it is my privilege to introduce several of his party.

First, his beautiful daughter, Mrs. Werhahn. In addition to welcoming the Chancellor and his party, we are very happy to welcome that distinguished Texan, the Vice-President of the United States. And now it is my privilege to present his charming wife, Ladybird Johnson. His Excellency, Dr. Henrich von Brentaro, Minister of Foreign Affairs or Secretary of State. His Excellency Wilhelm G.

Grewe, the German Ambassador to the United States; the Honorable Felix von Eckardt, State Secretary for the Federal Press Office of Germany; the Honorable Dr. Karl Carstens, State Secretary for the Federal Ministry of Foreign Affairs. And now, a very distinguished guest who flew here from California with his wife, Mrs. Nimitz, to be with the Chancellor and the Vice-President on this visit, the man who holds the highest uniform office in the Navy of the United States and in the Navy of the State of Texas, Admiral Chester Nimitz.

Admiral of the Fleet of the Texas Navy, it is about time you had a new set of Texas Navy cuff buttons, and tie clasp. This gold replica is cast from the original Texas Navy buttons, Admiral.

Now, Mr. Chancellor, as I have explained to you and the members of your party, in the book which I presented you, "German Settlements in Texas," you saw how much your people have thought of this Republic and then this State and from the early days there was friendship between the people of Germany and the Republic of Texas as shown by the copy which I have had made, with the help of Mr. Walter Long, from our State Archives, of the Treaty of Friendship and Trade which was executed between the Hanseatic Republics of Bremen, Hamborg, and Lubeck and the Republic of Texas in 1844. I will present to the Chancellor this copy of the treaty, together with something we are always proud to give to distinguished visitors to our State, and especially to this Head of State and distinguished Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, an honorary citizenship in The State of Texas.

Mr. Chancellor, I am happy as Governor to present these to you as mementos of your visit to Texas—and we thank all of you for coming here.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable James A. Turman, presented the Honorable Lyndon B. Johnson as follows:

Our State has produced many great men. In modern times no Texan has stood so tall in the affairs of the world, the leadership of the Nation, or the service of the State as the man who now serves in the high office of Vice-President of The United States, Lyndon B. Johnson.

When he left the services of Texas in January, to begin the greater service of our country in the office he now holds, Lyndon Johnson left big shoes to be filled. It was fitting tribute to him that never before had so many tried to fill one man's shoes as in the election to choose his successor.

In every office which he has held, Lyndon Johnson has served with brilliant distinction. Texans will always take pride in his service during the past eight years when in a time of divided government, the Congress being Democratic and the Executive Department being Republican, it was his courage and strength more than anything else that kept our Government on a responsible course and kept our country as an effective force in the free world's continuing struggle against the adversaries of our freedom.

Today he comes before us fresh from a mission abroad which has brought pride and reassurance to all Americans of all parties. On distant continents and new, emerging nations he has gone among the peoples and drawn from the voice of tens of thousands the cry of "Long live the United States, champion of independence."

I want him to know, and I believe that all present want him to know, that Texans are proud of him. We are proud of him and we are grateful to him for bringing to these chambers today the great world leader who is our guest. I am sure if we could but know that smiling down on these proceedings now must surely be the spirit of an honored frontier legislator who served in this House as we do now. I refer, of course, to Sam Ealy Johnson, the father of the man I am proud and privileged to present to you now, the Vice-President of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson.

The Vice-President of the United States, the Honorable Lyndon B. Johnson presented Congressman Homer Thornberry and Mrs. Thornberry and Admiral Chester Nimitz and Mrs. Nimitz and then addressed the Joint Session as follows:

Mr. Chancellor and his charming daughter and members of his party, Governor, Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the Senate, members of the House, my fellow countrymen, I am glad to have the privilege to return here to the House Chamber, a scene of my childhood. In this Chamber, my grandfather labored. In this House, my father gave his happiest service to his country for six terms. This is a proud moment for me and my family and the people of Texas.

Our State—like our Nation—is a land of many heritages. Men of many tongues have come here. They have lived together, worked together, and together they have learned to speak the language of freedom.

In our world today, no man speaks that language of freedom with greater clarity or greater force or greater inspiration than the man who does us the great honor of his presence today, the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Doctor Konrad Adenauer.

Standing in the jaws of grave danger at the edge of the Free World, he has shown a personal courage and an unfailing resolution which will be honored so long as men are free anywhere on this earth.

And I should like for all the world to know that all Americans admire this man, but we in the Lone Star State of Texas feel a special affinity for him.

More than a hundred years ago—in the 1830's—there began coming to Texas the first of what was to be a great tide of families from Germany. Throughout the years, as Texas became a Republic and then as Texas became one of the States of the Union, these fine people have made a contribution to our region, to our nation, and to the cause we support in concert with free men everywhere.

The German people who have meant so much to Texas came here seeking freedom—and seeking peace. What led those early families to our State more than a hundred years ago is the same thing that leads our guest to Texas today—the support of freedom throughout the world and the quest for peace for all the peoples of the world.

I speak for our own President when I say that the United States of America will not hesitate to walk the last mile—to go more than half way—to assure peace with honor throughout the world.

I can say that with equal resolve that until such peace is assured, the United States will not retreat one inch—will not move an eyelash—will not hesitate a fraction of a moment in maintaining whatever strength is necessary to preserve freedom throughout the world.

So, I would say to you, my most treasured friends of Texas today, and to my good and long-time friend, Dr. Adenauer, that the people of the United States have a man of courage, have a man of wisdom and vigor equal to his grave responsibilities as their President: the brilliant John F. Kennedy, President of the United States.

At our President's request, I have just completed a 13,000-mile mission into the world—to Africa, to Geneva, to France, to NATO. That was a mission of freedom for peace—and there will be many more. The leadership of America understands its responsibilities, today that leadership welcomes its opportunities, and that administration is now ready to go wherever and whenever duty calls to assure the success of the cause of freedom.

The security of Free Germany and Free Berlin is America's security.

The freedom of all men and all women wherever they live is the concern of all the people of The United States of America.

The betterment and the improvement of the lives of all human beings of all races of all religions and of all regions of the earth is the objective of The United States of America.

We recognize the perils but we have faith in our prayers. Keeping our faith we shall overcome those perils, and so today it gives me great pleasure and great honor to present to you, my beloved homefolks, a man who has kept great faith, a man who has overcome great perils—a man who is really an authentic giant of our times, the Chancellor of The Federal Republic of Germany, Dr. Konrad Adenauer.

His Excellency, the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Dr. Konrad Adenauer, addressed the Joint Session in his native language which was interpreted to the Joint Session as follows:

Mr. Governor, Presiding Officers, Ladies and Gentlemen of both Houses of Texas.

I have looked forward with great pleasure to this day, on which I am to speak to you. What I have experienced here on my trip surpasses by far all my wildest dreams. So much friendliness, so much joy, among the young and the old, as I experienced among you in Texas—yesterday in Fredericksburg, today here in your capital city—remains unique, I believe, in the life of a man.

Now my honored Ladies and Gentlemen, for us in Europe, Texas still is considered the embodiment of the expanse and diversity of America, of its vitality, its abundance and its generosity. Although the previous speakers have already done so, I believe that I may once again call to memory our many fellow-countrymen who came to this country a hundred years ago or more, in order to found for themselves a new home. Just yesterday in Fredericksburg I was witness of the fact that, although the spirit and vitality of the United States have long ago covered over these beginnings of the immigration, yet precisely there the German spirit spoke to me. And in this I saw the fulfillment of a task which the United States have. They have in my opinion the task to create among all the European peoples a certain order and a certain unity, which however will leave to every individual that which belongs to him, his own way of life. This the United States have done splendidly in their land. And I hope, after they now by means of their strength—not only their material strength but also their spiritual strength—have become the champions of liberty and peace, that they will carry out the same mission in the uniting of Europe.

Vice-President Johnson, with whom I am bound by long-standing personal and political ties, has spoken similarly, also in the words of President Kennedy, with words of very great, indeed of decisive significance. May I thank President Kennedy and Vice-President Johnson for this clear, this unmistakable language, which will be greeted with great joy in Germany. It will be greeted warmly not only in Germany, but also by all people in the free world, especially among the partners in our common alliance. And it will also be heard and understood—of this I am persuaded—far beyond the circle of the free peoples.

Here in Texas we have always found understanding for our problems, for the fate of our divided country, and its capital Berlin, which is cut off and isolated from the free West. In spite of the geographic distance between Texas and Berlin, you are thoroughly aware of the significance of this outpost of the free world. I hope, through my visit here, to have strengthened the ties between you and us. I would be especially happy if as many members as possible of both Houses of Texas would visit us in our German home as soon as possible.

Let me add some words which arise from the experience of this day. I would like to convey to you in a few sentences what pleased me so hugely about Texas. We flew about considerably in our helicopter yesterday, and today too, here from the ranch of Vice-President Johnson. How here in Texas the difficulties of the soil have been overcome is unparalleled. These huge irrigation works, this care of the soil is indeed exemplary.

And what further touches a chord, that is the freshness and the vitality of the people, especially also of the children. I believe the saying was just spoken: if one looks into someone's eyes, then one knows what one has before oneself. Now believe me, I must indeed look into the eyes of people very frequently. But so many happy, so many bright, so many shining eyes as I have seen here yesterday and today, I have for many a long day not seen in one place. And therefore the people of Texas, whose individuality, power and strength will, I hope, continue to be maintained in the United States, has moved me to the depths of my heart.

I thank you, the Representatives of the people of Texas, with all my heart for this, and express the wish that God will continue to protect your people and your land.
